It provides various options to personalize the process of conversion, such as selecting the language in which the audio file will be read and the voice used to perform it. If you often talk to your friends online using VoIP applications, you are probably aware that you need a microphone in order for them to hear you properly. If you do not own one, you can always write in the designated field, as many programs support instant messaging features, as well. However, it is also possible to rely on specialized software, such as GiggleType Cracked Accounts, to convert your message to text-to-speech (TTS) audio, so others can hear it without you needing a microphone. Simple user interface This program comes with a minimalistic layout that allows you to type your text directly into the main window and instantly convert it to TTS. You can choose between a standard voice engine to read your text or others that modify your entry into funny messages. The application provides you with additional configuration menus that allow you to adjust playback and voice parameters. Amusing features Aside from using this application as a standard TTS engine that can also play your messages on chat applications, you can opt for additional features that add funny twists to your content. For instance, the Cow option elongates your words by adding a couple of "o"'s every now and then and the Cussomatic helps you add profanity or generally offensive content to your text. You can access an additional Pronunciation window that can help you further personalize the application so that it can read your text messages as correctly as possible. You can select a word and manually define its pronunciation by using several methods, including phonemes and word substitutions. Handy voice customization options GiggleType allows you to choose between two default voice options, Microsoft a69d392a70
