* The whole production is in English only. Though I speak pretty good Japanese, I had to stick to English due to where I was in game production and I think it seems better in English anyways. * I did not include items or shops that are not available to acquire in-game. Some other missions can be completed if they're unlocked but I didn't show those because it would lead to too many things to explain. * I did not include any beginning-end cutscenes nor a leveling up system. I wanted the player to be able to play, relax, and see how they progress through time, kind of like a JRPG. * The mission system is unique in that you play one-way missions where you are assigned a specific goal to meet. Then you go back in the future and play missions until the time to meet the goal is up. * There are 3 ways to play: 1-only goal (eg. To survive) 2-same goal but different time (eg. To survive each day) 3-different goal but the same time (eg. To always survive while growing population) * Growth is optional, at the cost of a day per person * At the end of each day, you can look at the player's stats and see which day was the most enjoyable for them, in terms of happiness or satisfaction from reaching their goal. This can be helpful in deciding which day you should play again. It's also a way for the player to relax for the next day. * You can view the player's stats, goals, and progress on a HUD-like display. * You have a special goal where you can acquire an item from another player, "The Great Escape". * You can build relationships with people by talking to them. * In "The Great Escape" you can buy and sell items with other players. * In "The Great Escape" you can play missions with other players by choosing to tag them as "friends". * You cannot befriend players you have not already met in game. * You can send a friend a message by pressing R at any point during the game. * You can post a message in your friends' journal by pressing A after checking their name in the HUD. * There is a Friends List in the menu where you can see who you have met in game, their messages, and what missions you were sent on together. * You can not send messages to players who are already tagged as friends. c9d1549cdd
